

Different Journeys, Shared Hope

People move for many different reasons.
Each journey is unique, and every story matters.
Here are some of the ways people travel to a new country and what these words mean.

Refugee ♥

A refugee is someone who has fled their country because they fear persecution, war, violence, or serious harm. They cannot safely return home.

Asylum Seeker ♥

An asylum seeker is someone who asks another country for protection. Their request must be reviewed by the government, and it may be approved or denied.

Immigrant ♥

An immigrant is someone who moves to another country to live there. People may move to join family, study, work, or to build a different future.

Migrant ♥

A migrant is someone who moves from one place to another, within a country or across borders. Some move for work, family, education, or a better life.

Every Story Matters

People move for many different reasons.
There is no single reason, and no single story.
Some leave a place they love to find safety.
Others move to be with family, to learn, to work,
or to create a new beginning.
Together, these journeys make our communities stronger, kinder, and more colorful.

Different places. Different cultures. Different journeys.
One shared world — a place to call home.
